The FBI's image could be improved if their top man in Miami becomes better-known nationally after this convention and the next in August.

Kenneth Whittaker, who dresses like the "Mod Squad" and dances past midnight with his cover-girl wife at the Palm Bay Club, makes the scene with the jet set and gets invited everywhere.

His sense of humor is startling to Washingtonians accustomed to G-Men afraid even to smile.

He carries two slender gold ballpoint pens which he kiddingly claims are eavesdropping devices. When a reporter confiscated one and refused to give it back, he pulled off her "media" press identification badge and told onlookers, "I should have known better . . . Media Pennsylvania . . . She's one of the nuns who broke in and rifled our files!"
